

Teenagers aren't the only ones
struggling to be independent.

Maintaining finances can be difficult. Help is available.

From balancing a checkbook to paying bills or managing a government benefit, managing your money gets harder as you age. For many who are disabled and live alone, financial affairs are an obstacle to living independently. Those with an annual income under $21,000 for an individual or under $31,000 for a couple may be eligible for the Money Management Program. This program provides assistance with financial tasks.
